From the Desk of Dan Croce, President

Dan Croce
President, ACME Markets

This is a truly humbling moment to write a message on behalf of the ACME team to our great partners at Food World and Food Trade News. It has been close to a decade since ACME was last given this honor and the timing is a turning point for our company. For me personally, my second year at ACME in 2006 was the year of our last recognition piece from Food World/Food Trade News. Never in my wildest dreams did I think I would be writing the next excerpt for ACME as their president. That honor alone lights my passion and commitment to the ACME family – our people, our customers, and our partners.

125 years of serving our communities

This year is a milestone for ACME and I'm proud to be leading the ACME team as we celebrate 125 years of serving our communities. ACME operates 178 stores in six states – Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, New York, and Connecticut – and we have the most loyal and dedicated team of 20,000 associates. We are the strongest and healthiest we have been in over 20 years. Our associates and customers deserve a new ACME that is enriched with our legacy and a culture that embraces change and shapes a new food experience in our stores.

Remaining faithful to our values has been the heart of ACME for the past 125 years. Taking care of our associates, making ACME a fun place to work, and being very deliberate with recognition is the heart and soul of our organization. Having been voted a top workplace by Philly.com and forging an ongoing partnership with St. Joseph's University to recruit the industry's future leaders are just two small examples of how ACME believes in our people first.

We truly believe if we take care of each other that we will take care of our customers.

From city to shore, ACME is local

As an iconic brand in the Delaware Valley, our community stewardship coupled with defining and differentiating the store experience are just a few elements of what keeps us connected to our customers' needs, wants, and desires.

In 2015 alone, we've given back to our communities in a big way. Through our philanthropic efforts with our vendor partners, customers, and local organizations, we were able to donate more than $775,000 in cash and in-kind donations in addition to 3.6 million pounds of food to help fight hunger. We value our partnerships with local organizations like the Philadelphia Eagles, the Philadelphia Union, Dover Speedway, WMMR, MDA, various cancer care and research organizations including Alex's Lemonade, Susan G. Komen, and Bringing Hope Home – just to name a few. We know we couldn't do what we do without our community partners.

We continuously listen to feedback from our customers not just about our community efforts but also our offerings. We know how important it is to have a one-stop shop and we adjust our offerings as necessary. Over the years, we've added key elements including gluten-free delis in select ACME locations to cater to our customers with food sensitivities. We've also grown our Pennsylvania beer store count to seven and continue to focus on our fresh offerings.

Our future is very bright

In the last year, ACME has grown its store network by over 65 percent and we have aspirations of continuing that trend for future growth. The addition of 71 stores and 8,000 new team members has been the biggest growth change in over 40 years. We cannot thank our teams and partners enough for their commitment and support through this transition. Despite our growth, as one ACME Nation, we remain committed to our first priority of being your favorite local neighborhood supermarket through our six pillars:

1. Lower Prices
2. Cleaner Stores
3. Superior Service
4. Better ad prices
5. Quality fresh foods
6. Community partnership

We believe in running really great stores and getting better every day. We could not do that without all of our partners. As we continue to build the new ACME and expand our footprint, it never goes unnoticed that our trusted partners have remained with us and we cannot thank you enough for your partnership and support. You will continue to have our commitment in growing our collective businesses and being your partner of choice.

Most importantly, at ACME our first priority is to provide quality food to our customers at a fair price. We are committed to feeding our communities and providing our neighbors with the best shopping experience around. Our company leadership, office teams, field teams, and our store teams live in and give back to the neighborhoods we serve. We are local and will continue to get better every day.

For President Dan Croce, Customer Focus, Associate

Food World/Food Trade News: Since being named president of ACME Markets about a year ago, what have been the most surprising aspects of the job? The biggest challenges?

Dan Croce: The biggest challenge by far in the last year was not so much becoming the president of ACME but making sure that we meet the expectations of our customers and associates every day. That's my number one priority. Running parallel to that this year is the pure growth, expansion, and the accelerated rate of our division – which is unique to ACME. Taking ACME to 178 stores has simply been unbelievable. To say it was a challenge is an understatement, however, I personally thrive off of challenges and so does the ACME nation. What's exciting is that we are not just enduring our business but we are creating the future. This is an opportunity of a lifetime. This year has gone by quickly and I would almost like to say that I really haven't felt like the president this year. Everything has been moving so quickly with expanding the company, driving our business, and working as one team.

Food World/Food Trade News: A lot of our readers have seen the before and the after of the 71 ACME-acquired converted stores and said, “that’s unbelievable.” Can you give us a little color on the process you went through? Tell us what really happened, how did the plan come to life and how was the ACME nation able to do so much in such a short period of time.

Dan Croce: It was an amazing and probably the most intense logistical process I have ever seen. I have had the pleasure of having some good teachers over my life in process management and that goes back to the first question of how I almost felt like I was not the president, because it was more of a completely new and different job task. It all started with going out and doing the diligence for the stores and being intimately involved in which stores we were going to submit for purchase. Once we narrowed that list down and formed our 71-store list, we went on to put in our bid and it all was accepted. Simultaneously, we were building the process map to flip these stores. We built process maps determining whether to take the stores dark for an extended period of time or open them quickly. We had to determine if we should close them down for five days, or for four days. We ended up doing a 64-hour flip because the stores were declining at an accelerated rate and we needed to do something compelling and quick. During the months of April, May, June, July, and August we recruited, developed, and organized a process team here at ACME for turning the stores. It was all boots on the ground and we organized every aspect of the company. From culture to communications to information technology to warehousing to logistics to pharmacy operations to store operations to merchandising to pricing, we had it covered. All of those intricate work streams flowed together to formalize our 64-hour plan. Believe it or not, we organized a process map over those months that went down to the minute on what we were getting done. It also detailed when and how all of those work streams would coincide and work in harmony as opposed to chaos. It did feel a little chaotic at times, but nonetheless, we were able to flip 71 stores and each store took 64 hours exactly. There was not one miss.

Food World/Food Trade News: Obviously, the A&P bankruptcy didn't occur until July, but the writing was on the wall much earlier than that. So, you began your plan in April even before you knew exactly when the stores would become available. How were you able to devise a plan between the bankruptcy on July 21 and the bid you submitted two weeks later?

Dan Croce: We weren't able to access the stores based on our ownership, but we were certainly working with A&P to submit requests for various diligence work, whether it was just pure facility assessment or people assessment. We worked with A&P to have opportunities to visit. One honorable note – the number one work stream we focused on was culture and combining the two companies on Day One. We are still working on it to this day but this remains a focus area for us. Our first primary request of A&P was for an official visit, and we toured all 71 stores in mid-July. At that time, we did two-hour sessions with the associates of every single store to talk about who we are, what we are, and what we planned to do. It was important to keep the morale and spirit for the team alive. That was by far our biggest task. I will say this, from a process perspective, we worked really hard for the Albertsons family of stores to climb to a higher altitude. We wrote a blueprint, if you will, to outline the entire process for future opportunities and acquisitions.

Food World/Food Trade News: What did you learn? What assumptions that you made earlier in the process actually ended up changing radically? Because, everything again was done outside-in. You didn't really get into the guts of it until you brought the crews in.

Dan Croce: We knew that the culture was the number one priority by far. So, kudos to us, we knew that, but we grossly underestimated how long it is really going to take to change the culture, and how much work is going to be required. That was by far the biggest priority we had and we recognized it was going to be the biggest challenge. I mean we are good operators, we know how to run stores, we know how to put it together, we know how to merchandise a store, but the biggest challenge was introducing our culture to 8,000 associates that were about to join our family.

Food World/Food Trade News: How much of an advantage was it that you had worked for A&P for a long time? That you knew the system, you knew the heartbeat, you knew some of the associates at least?

Dan Croce: Not much, really. I had been gone for 11 years. It was a completely different company than the one I left. The only value I had was I understood the network, the geography, and where the stores were positioned. But how they were doing business was grossly different from what I had left over a decade ago.

Food World/Food Trade News: What about from a mechanical point of view? Can you give our readers a little flavor on the turnaround process?

Dan Croce: From a process perspective, we had what we called “Day Zero.” We arrived at 3:00 p.m. on day zero and opened up on day three. Days zero, one, and two were completely dark. We started by taking inventory and we levelled the books with A&P personnel. Then the transfer of assets in the store itself occurred. Our transfer occurred

Engagement Remain Keys To ACME's Long-Term Success

with the purchase of that particular store and immediately we went to work. We had various partners helping us throughout the transfer process. We had a tag team of upwards of 100 people in the store that helped retag the store in the first eight hours. Pre-set orders were in the pipeline for key commodities. We had a framework of merchandise to start building our displays and then we would get into actual order writing. The day of order writing would be the day of delivery and the process would follow through accordingly. Running parallel to that was a team removing the old IT systems and putting the new technology into the store. And, there was a team that facilitated all of the cleaning and sanitation protocols. The team then began to clean the entire store. There was a crew on the outside of the store pressure washing the entire building all while getting the building up to the best environmental code possible. We had great partners - Retail Merchandising Services, Inc. (RMSI) and Belfor International. RMSI is one of our current partners that work on our reset programs. Belfor International - another huge partner for us - helped us expedite the cleaning in such a short amount of time.

Food World/Food Trade News: And, for the record, the process began late in September, early in October?

Dan Croce: September 29 was the first day. All 71 stores were completed by November 18.

Food World/Food Trade News: You're in the first blush with the former A&P stores. You got them open by the holidays so you could take advantage of that strong business opportunity. Obviously everyone has admitted that the goal was "get them open, get it done." Can you explain to our readers what needs to be done moving forward, other than constantly nurturing the culture?

Dan Croce: The tangibles. Obviously we have a very strong network of stores in great communities that have been underserving those communities to differing degrees. For example, the store in Ortley Beach, New Jersey is a decent looking store inside, but that store needs a new façade. We will get that place spruced up. Then of course we have stores like New Canaan, Connecticut, which is perhaps one of the wealthiest demographics in the country. Not only New Canaan, but Greenwich, Stamford and Riverside, Connecticut are really underserving those communities with the offerings that we have. That said, we have 27 remodels in the pipeline for those 71 new ACME stores and 23 remodels for our legacy stores. In total we have 50 remodels coming this year out of our 178 stores. To include Sea Isle City, NJ being a "scrape and rebuild" store that we will open for Memorial Day weekend. We also have Patterson, NY and Boonton, NJ in the pipeline to open in early June as well. The 27 new stores that are going to be getting remodeled are a big priority for us this year. Those remodels can be anywhere from a quick $500,000 to $1 million to get the décor right; to a multi-million dollar remodel to restructure the store and give it the investment that has been remiss in some cases for two decades. Simultaneously, we continue to look for opportunities such as Barnegat, NJ. Barnegat has been a great win for us and we are excited to be in the town of Barnegat.

Food World/Food Trade News: If this was 2010, and you had been offered the opportunity corporately to take a shot at Barnegat, things would have been different. That leads to the question of what factors have been the most important in the turnaround of ACME over the past three years? Obviously, one is you had an open shot at Barnegat, you took advantage of it. You did it the right way. That in itself is to me illustrative of the microcosm of how things have changed. But, on a bigger plane, how have things changed for you, even though you weren't president then, you were certainly in the senior management circle.

Dan Croce: Honestly, in the traditional supermarket sector, I believe that a decentralized business model is the most effective method to drive business. That by far is the most important element of ACME's business from a structure perspective. When you think about business and you think about the supermarket industry specifically - what is your model? What is your structure? A centralized model doesn't work for divisions and companies such as ACME. We are a local East Coast chain that can

on page 6

win the hearts and the minds of the customers that we serve, but it has to be run locally. There are eight things I think about when I think about a decentralized business model. The first four things are people, process, partners, and performance. We are a people-first organization and we build processes that we need partners to help us drive and hopefully, if we focus on our people, our process, and partners, performance will fulfill itself. Running parallel to that, specifically within process and partners, we have full autonomy with price, promotion, product, and placement. That unto itself has been the biggest game changer for ACME.

Food World/Food Trade News: What about from the corporate end? Decentralized speaks of individuality, but from a corporate culture and a corporate mindset, allowing you to fly your own plane is one thing, but what else have they done in providing the support both financially and emotionally to let you ultimately become a different company?

Dan Croce: If I had to sum it up in one statement, I would say, decision making rights with accountability. Our corporate leaders, (Albertsons CEO) Bob Miller and his senior team believe in us, they reiterate their confidence in our ability to perform with a very clear line of sight in saying we have full autonomy to make decisions to move our business. But we are highly accountable for those decisions. Bob's model is very simple - you take care of the people that run your company, they will take care of the customers that shop your company and the wheels of business will continue to spin.

Food World/Food Trade News: For you, how much more inspirational - or maybe aspirational - is it to have a leader like Bob who is boots-on-the-ground vs. previous management whose style was definitely different.

Dan Croce: Significantly different. I have a CEO that can specifically tell me not only about opportunities in our division because he has been boots on the ground to see our stores, but I also have a CEO who knows me, he knows my wife, he knows about my family, and he genuinely cares about me as a human being. That is by far the biggest differentiator.

Food World/Food Trade News: Using your crystal ball, how would you view the Delaware Valley and Metro New York landscapes 18 months from now?

Dan Croce: Great question. It is by far the most volatile time I can recall in my 30 years in the business in terms of what is happening with companies coming in and companies going out. I will tell you this, it's exciting to be at ACME because of the market volatility and our growth. It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for those of us who have been in the business for 10, 20 or 30 years. As for myself, I'm excited that I am at the helm of ACME leading this team to get better every day. With A&P closing 294 stores, we picked up 71 of them, Stop & Shop picked up 25, ShopRite picked up 16 and various independents picked up approximately another 30; that's significant change in itself. When we look at that, we see nothing but tremendous opportunity for future growth for ACME. I think the traditional supermarket will reaffirm itself in the Northeast corridor in totality as the food center of choice for customers. A locally driven supermarket chain is by far the biggest competitive advantage in the Northeastern part of the United States just because of how customers choose to shop, how their lifestyles are and the positioning of those stores being meaningful. The position of a store is important from a pure location perspective; but equally as important are the offerings and store experience for our customers inside the store. So take North Wilmington, DE for example. We picked up a store in the acquisition on Marsh Road and Silverside Road and it has been remiss of investment for over 20 years. With its great location we can position this store to be meaningful and relevant to its community once again. By expanding natural, organic, healthy, specialty, ethnic, and fresh offerings such as meals to go inside that footprint, we will reinvigorate a shopping experience in a very familiar location for the customers of North Wilmington.

Food World/Food Trade News: You are going to have a net number of stores get impacted by the competition. That doesn't mean it's going to be any less challenging as new people come in, does it?

Dan Croce: You have specialists such as Whole Foods and of course Wegmans that continue to look for property in our marketplace. I will tell you, I am not going to worry about their competitive advantage. I am going to illustrate and leverage our competitive advantage. Our competitive advantage is to be meaningful and relevant, again those are words, but I believe in them, from a food perspective. Food is an extraordinarily personal experience. If you are a local supermarket in a neighborhood that has been served by ACME for decades or for years or for one month or whatever it may be, our job is to connect with that community. We will do that with food and our people by running a very clean, fresh, and friendly store. Sounds hokey, but that is what we believe and that is what we say every day. If we are not inextricably linked to driving cleaner stores, lower prices, better ads, community partnerships, superior service, and of course, fresh produce each and every day, then we are working on the wrong things. That won't happen here at ACME.

Food World/Food Trade News: Thank you.

Dan Croce, president of ACME Markets, is a highly successful supermarket executive with 31 years of grocery experience, the last 11 with ACME Markets.

Croce joined ACME in 2005 as a district manager, the first ever recruited outside of the company. He held this position for three years before being appointed the director of operations in 2008. Croce's achievements within operational responsibility and his collaborative work with the operations and merchandising teams to drive top line sales and reduce operating costs led to his next appointments as vice president of sales support and then vice president of operations in 2010 and 2011 respectively. Croce was promoted to vice president of merchandising/marketing in 2014 before being promoted to president of the division in early 2015.

Prior to joining ACME, Croce was with Super Fresh/A&P Food Markets where he started his grocery career in 1985. While at Super Fresh, he held positions that included co-manager, store director, director of customer service and district manager. He was part of the store management advisory board and received sponsorship to attend the executive education program of the American Food Management System.

Croce is a graduate of the University of Delaware where he earned a bachelor of science degree in agricultural business in 1991.

Bill Crosby: At ACME Markets, It's All About The Stores

Bill Crosby
VP-Operations

ACME Markets' vice president of operations Bill Crosby is like many executives in today's supermarket industry - he started his career when he was a teenager, working in the stores. "I've been in retail since I was 17, working in a Super Fresh cleaning pots and pans in the deli," he says.

Crosby held store manager positions at Super Fresh and ACME for several years before leaving the industry for a time. He joined the ACME team in Malvern, PA in 2009 as a store director before being promoted to district manager in 2010. He left the company for a short time before rejoining in 2014 as a district manager before being promoted to his current post. Along the way, Crosby earned a bachelor's degree from Villanova University.

Today, Crosby oversees the operations of all ACME stores, including the 71 former A&P locations the company recently acquired. Under his purview are the brick and mortar stores, the store associates, safety and food safety, to name a few. In other words, as Crosby puts it, "Anything that deals with day-to-day store operations is my responsibility."

Like many on the ACME team, Crosby's career has spanned much change in the industry. He describes it this way: "First and foremost is probably the automation and computerization of the business. That has changed everything we do in the stores. Also having an influence on the supermarket industry as a whole is the impact of the large competitors that now operate in our region - Wal-Mart, Whole Foods, etc. And, don't forget online retailers, which pop up all the time."

Also changing are the consumers ACME serves. "The education of consumers today, with the availability of information from so many sources, has really changed the way we market to our shoppers. All of the media outlets and the impact they have, from the 'Oprah Effect' to Dr. Oz. Trends used to take a while to develop, now they're showing up almost instantly, and constantly."

Aiding ACME's success in these ever-changing times is the strength of the Albertsons organization. Crosby tells us, "From top to bottom, they're all about the stores and the people. The recent success we've had is due to our decentralization under Albertsons. We can make the decisions that we know need to be made locally at store level. There are no levels, no channels to go through corporately. We run our division, which is so important."

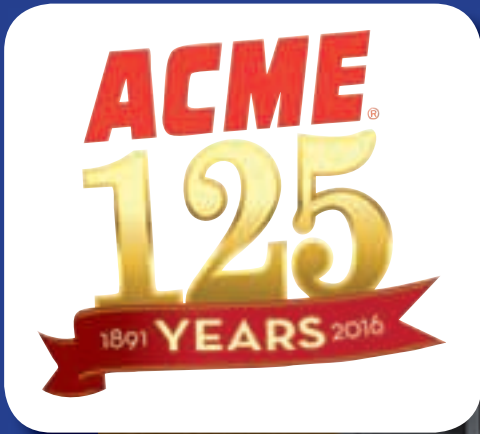

Crosby is bullish on the company's prospects for greater success with the recent addition of the 71 A&P stores and is proud of the work ACME's team has done to integrate them into the company. "Our biggest challenge - and opportunity - with the new stores during and after the acquisition was convincing the associates that they could believe in us. After all, they had to change course so many times in the past few years. We were able to keep a lot of great associates and they are glad to be part of our winning team. So, we have been very busy in the stores and in our store support center working to build the team and help everyone learn to believe that they can win." Crosby says.

Looking forward, Crosby wants to urge the vendor community to be involved in ACME's growth and future success: "We're open for business. When we're given a program, we work hard to execute it at store level to ensure its success. If we aren't performing the way we should be, we want to hear from you. At the end of the day, we have three priorities - the first is sales, the second is sales and the third is sales. Vendors should see this as a win-win proposition of mutually driving sales that benefits both ACME Markets and the vendor we do business with. ACME is truly a company of its word. What we say we're going to do, we do."

Kim Gray: Local Marketing Is Key To ACME's Success

Kim Gray
VP-Marketing and Merchandising

Kim Gray, ACME Markets' vice president of marketing and merchandising, brings a lifetime of supermarket industry experience to his current post. He estimates he's spent about half of that career in operations and half of it in merchandising. Except for a short stint in in 2010-2012 with Giant/Landover, Gray's years have all been with Albertsons, in multiple capacities. He started as a store clerk, moving up to department manager, store manager and district manager before transitioning from stores to the store support center. He first was a grocery sales manager before moving up to the VP posts at several Albertsons divisions, including Dallas, Texas; Orlando, Florida; Houston, Texas before heading to ACME.

Today, Gray describes his job as: "Marketing ACME in the best light I can. It's my job to set our image and tell that story. The marketing and merchandising team works to get customers in the door so they can buy all of the products they're looking for."

In addition, he and his team oversee creation of the ads each week. Gray oversees the sales managers and works to balance the selling environment with responsive marketing - the action of building processes and strategies that behave differently based on your audience. Underlying all of that is his responsibility to oversee the company's profits and losses and manage expenses.

When asked to describe today's ACME, Gray says: "We have a term we use internally at ACME. It's, 'we're not your grand-ma's ACME anymore.' The market today demands that we stay current."

How does ACME stay current? Gray explains: "We have to keep in mind that today's shopper generally has more money to spend and less time in which to spend it. So, it's our job to identify what we can do to help them save time and make the shopping experience more enjoyable. First, it's about service. We do everything we can to make the shopping experience more 'comfortable.' That means we have Starbucks kiosks in the stores, our service deli has a wide selection of appetizing and convenient meal solutions, our hot foods are innovative and inviting."

While staying current, ACME also must keep in mind how the consumer has changed, and will continue to change. Gray tells us: "People probably still eat the same thing every week that they always have, so their grocery list stays about the same. But they aren't satisfied with that, so it's up to us to figure out how to help them come up with new ideas. For example, our in-store fresh cut fruits and vegetables offer customers a time-saving way to eat healthier foods."

Gray also believes that more local marketing will be essential to ACME's continued success. "We want to be more embedded in our communities. ACME is local. We buy from local farms and local companies. This enables us to offer shoppers things they might not be able to find at other chains that might not be as focused on the communities as we are."

Gray is proud of the positive changes he's seen at ACME in the time since they have become part of the Albertsons team.

"How do you reinvigorate a company? Luckily, we have truly great leadership. We have the right people in place who believe in us at ACME and we have the right people focused on making it happy locally. It's a winning combination."

The addition of 71 A&P stores to the ACME banner has been a very exciting part of the retailer's recent resurgence. "The A&P acquisition has marked the first time that ACME has grown or expanded since the 1960s and 70s. It has been great to have the associates see that we are growing and moving forward, and that spirit has spread to the new ACME associates as well. It was very rewarding to be able to save tens of thousands of jobs at the A&P stores we acquired. Now, our job is to teach them that they need to sell their way to prosperity."

While the transition has been a huge task for all involved, Gray believes that the results have been very positive. "We did a pretty good job of folding people into the company. Now, we have to teach them the ACME way of doing business. It's not easy for them, but we've come light years from where we were at the start of the process. It's been quite the learning curve for our new team members, but a lot of training has taken place to help them merchandise to ACME standards.

There are many similarities between the legacy ACME associates and the new ACME team. Gray explains: "I was very surprised when going over some statistics on the new ACME associates who were joining our team. The average tenure for an ACME store associate is 26 years, which I think is terrific. But, the average tenure for an A&P store associate is 28 years!"

Perhaps a larger task in the transition of the A&P stores to ACME standards has been the merchandising in the stores. "The first push was to get the stores full, fresh, friendly and clean," explains Gray. "We are expanding fresh in a big way at the new stores. Every store is going to have a power alley of fresh. We are also adding fresh cut produce, something they didn't have before," says Gray.

Making sure the transition to full, fresh, friendly and clean is successful in every store, ACME actively measures each location's CSI - Customer Service Index. "We measure CSI at every store by a survey on every cash receipt at checkout. If the store, or the department within the store, doesn't get a 9 or a 10, it's considered a zero. This is measured every day in every store," says Gray. "Then, we follow-up on every customer input that is below the 9 or 10 level to make sure the problem is addressed immediately."

Also important to the successful transition of the new ACME stores to the same success enjoyed by the legacy ACMEs is a strong investment in community outreach. Gray's team has a plan in place utilizing TV and radio, ROPs, target focused mailers and a strong push of charitable and community giving.

Gray believes that the company's current and future success is closely entwined with support from the vendor community. "Decentralization has been very important and key to our success. We make the decisions here and that means we need the vendors to bring their deals here. We want to grow our business, and that means we can grow their business at the same time. If a vendor makes a commitment to us, we will follow through and we will do what we say we will. Bring us any ideas, any thoughts you have. I encourage you to bring your focus to ACME and to take advantage of the talented group we have here. If you do, we will all benefit from the positive results."

Dan Dosenbach: At ACME, The People Make The Difference

Dan Dosenbach
VP-HR/Labor Relations

Ten years ago, Dan Dosenbach made what some might view as radical career shift. He had joined ACME Markets after a successful career serving as the general counsel for the United Food and Commercial Workers in Chicago, a labor organization with 34,000 members. Now he would be literally “switching sides,” working for management at one of the most iconic retail chains in the Northeast.

However, Dosenbach never viewed the new job opportunity as anything close to being adversarial. “The goal is always the same for both parties,” he explained. “We both want to get our contracts settled fairly and I’ve always treated the people we bargain with respect, regardless of which side I’ve been on.”

Now, as ACME’s VP-human resources & labor relations, Dosenbach is the retailer’s key link between some of its most important associates – the clerks and meatcutters who are employed at the company’s 178 stores.

An attorney by background, Dosenbach said that wearing two hats not only keeps his job interesting, but allows him to utilize aspects of each role to improve the retailer’s overall objectives.

“On the labor side, successfully bargaining contracts and the underlying administrative duties related to the job are very important. On the HR side, we are able to work with the associates on a more individualized basis. I’m a big believer in putting all of our associates in a position where they can maximize their strengths. We want to give them the opportunity to succeed while also challenging them to strive to reach the next level. We’re all in the people business and that’s why my job is so rewarding,” he noted.

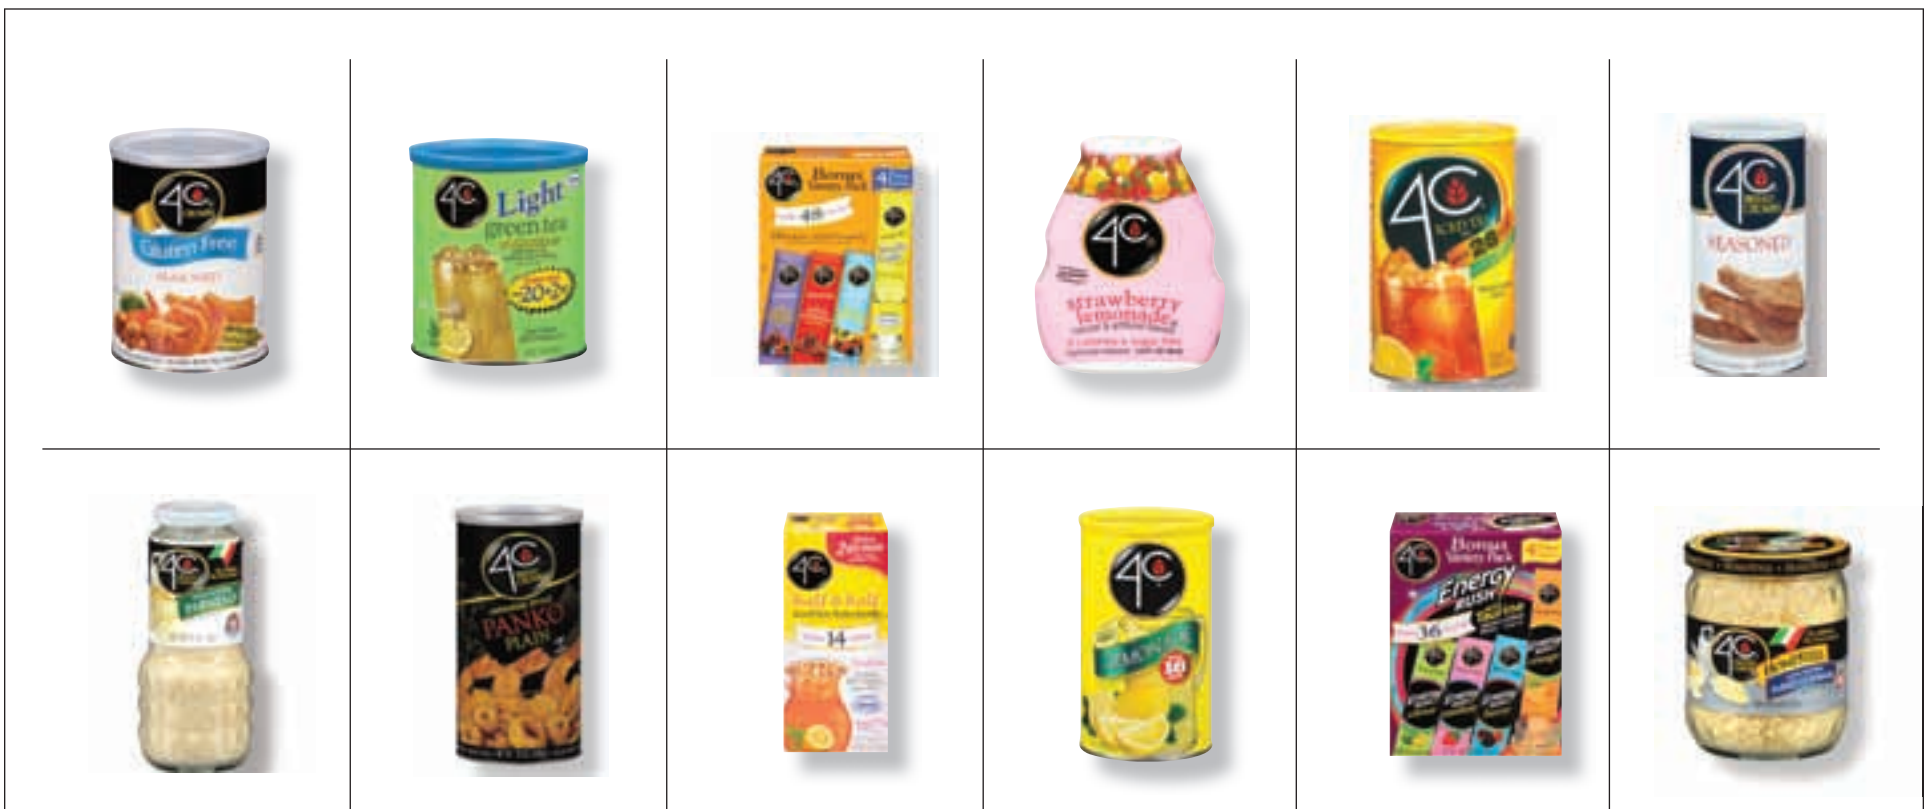

Dosenbach joined ACME when it was owned by Supervalu. While he acknowledges that things have changed considerably over the past decade (especially in the last three years since Albertsons LLC acquired the Malvern, PA-based chain), he views the upper management structures at each company primarily as differences in corporate philosophies.

“Supervalu’s model was more process and expense driven. With the decentralized model at all the Albertsons companies now deeply with their divisions, we have more freedom and flexibility. It’s a philosophy that I believe in because each market is different, and being allowed to focus on what’s important to ACME and their associate allows all of us to accomplish our objectives more clearly.”

For many years, trade observers viewed ACME’s mature, unionized store level associate base as a competitive disadvan-

Jeff Geiges
Sales Manager-Meat, Seafood, Prepack

Jeff Geiges: At ACME, It's Sales First, Sales Always

The man in charge of meat, seafood and pre-pack for ACME Markets is Jeff Geiges, a 37-year veteran of the company. He joined the company after studying at Wesley College. Over the course of his ACME career, Geiges has spent nine years in store operations, one year in human resources and 27 years in merchandising and procurement.

As sales manager for meat, seafood and pre-pack, Geiges is currently responsible for all merchandising and procurement, including writing the ads and developing the merchandising schemes, displays and store sets. He also oversees "people development," both inside and outside the stores. His team includes two assistant category managers and one department specialist. Together, these folks ensure that all of ACME's stores are on top of their game in meat and seafood.

With nearly four decades in the business, Geiges can certainly talk about the changes the industry has seen over the years. In the protein segment of the business especially, there have been many changes, Geiges explains. "Consumers' eating habits have changed. Gone are the days when families sat down to dinner at home seven days a week. More and more, families are going out to dinner. Even if they eat at home, it's not the traditional type of meal where everyone eats at the same time." Geiges and his team continue to introduce products and develop programs that can assist shoppers with solving their at-home dining needs.

What consumers are eating has changed, too, says Geiges. "There has been an explosion of natural and organics. Consumers, especially millennials, are much more nutrition-conscious these days. And, we've seen huge growth in the ethnic side of the business." These changes have been strongly influenced by the multiple channels of information available to consumers today, from the many TV cooking channels to instant access to information on the web through a wide variety of portals such as specialized apps and other online tools.

For this reason, ACME needs to be able to cater to many different needs and tastes, says Geiges. "We need to take care of everyone, from stay-at-home moms to millennials."

Geiges says meeting these goals has been strongly assisted under the new Albertsons umbrella where decentralization has been embraced. "In my 28 years of management, I've seen centralization tried three times. And I've seen it fail three times," Geiges says. "Today, we pride ourselves on being local, it's our lifeblood. Today, it's sales first, sales always."

As the company continues to grow, most recently with its acquisition of 71 former A&P stores, Geiges believes that vendor assistance will be vital to ACME's continued growth and success. He told us: "Over the past three years of decentralization, our preferred vendors have really come to the table and they have enjoyed double-digit growth every year." With this in mind, he tells the entire vendor community, "If you aren't bringing us your best deals, you're missing out. Come fast and come heavy, because we can sell some cases. When we do that, everybody wins - ACME, the vendors and the customers."

Mary Washinko
Sales Manager-Deli and Prepared Foods

Mary Washinko To Vendors: Think Outside The Box

Mary Washinko, ACME's Markets' sales manager for deli and prepared foods, is a 40-year veteran of the Malvern, PA based retailer. She started her career in the stores in the meat department and deli department and worked as deli manager in various stores in northeastern Pennsylvania and northern New Jersey. She was promoted in 1985, taking a post in the company's Whippany, NJ office, as the deli-seafood buyer/merchandiser and continued in various positions in merchandising and marketing until 1999, when she was named senior category manager of service deli.

In her current post, Washinko is responsible for sales and profits for the deli and prepared foods departments, as well as development and execution of new programs, store set ups for new and remodeled stores, and training of department managers. Her goal, says Washinko, is "to maintain the cutting edge of first-to-market with new trends and products to grow sales and satisfy our customers' needs and wants." The most important part of her job is "exceeding sales and satisfying the customer."

When asked about the challenges of her job, Washinko, a very upbeat person, says she doesn't find challenges, but rather "opportunities to grow and learn."

Over the course of her supermarket career, Washinko has seen many changes, particularly in deli and prepared foods. Influencing much of the change in recent years has been changes in consumers' lifestyles and eating habits. "People want to be healthier and, with today's technology, are much more knowledgeable shoppers," says Washinko.

Supermarkets over the years have learned a lot about prepared foods and have become much better at fulfilling consumers' desires to buy meals at the supermarkets that they can prepare easily at home. "When supermarkets first got into prepared foods, we didn't get it right," Washinko explains. "But, we learned over the years and have made big improvements. We've gotten stronger in what we in the business call home meal replacement. We now carry more products that are, in my opinion, better than most restaurants. We've seen huge improvements in hot foods, in self-serve foods and in service grab and go meals."

Like many on the ACME team, Washinko has seen highs and lows as the retailer moved back and forth under different regimes from decentralization to centralization and back. She puts it this way: "The best day in my life was when we became part of the Albertsons team and were back to being decentralized. Now, we have more local items than we ever had before. It's great to be able to support local companies and have them support us."

Also on the positive side of the scales is the success of ACME's acquisition of 71 former A&P stores. "The integration process has been great," says Washinko. "The associates in the new stores see me every other week, and they're not used to that. They see that we are passionate about what we do, and they are happy to be part of the team."

Washinko's message to the vendor community: "Bring us innovation. Think outside the box when it comes to deli and prepared foods. Don't bring us the same old-same old. Know what's going on in our stores, what our customers want so you know what you should bring to us."

Jenifer Krause
Sales Manager-Fresh Bakery

Jenifer Krause: Bakery Innovation Keeps Sales Strong

Jenifer Krause, ACME Markets' fresh bakery sales manager, has been with the retailer for 28 years. Like so many others on the ACME team, Krause began her career in the stores, working through high school and college. After graduating from St. Joseph's University with a bachelor's degree in food marketing, Krause took a position with the company as an auditor and worked on special projects. She went through ACME's management training program and then served as an assistant store director before becoming a field specialist. She also spent four years in the company's marketing department and served as lead execution manager for general merchandise and health and beauty care before moving into her current post.

Today, Krause is responsible for ensuring that the stores' fresh bakery departments are operating at the top of their game. She is responsible for the overall look and feel of the bakeries. She oversees product selection, forecasting, promotions and overall logistics in the fresh bakery arena. She stays on top of what's hot and what's new in bakery, working closely with ACME's vendor partners to stay in the know. In bakery, seasonality has a great influence on what needs to be available at different times of the year. So, Krause and her team are constantly changing up the product mix based on holidays, seasons and special occasions as they come and go.

Additionally, it's important for Krause to know what the competition is doing in their bakeries. Beyond retail, though, the team needs to keep abreast of what new bakery products consumers are finding in restaurants, on TV cooking channels and anyplace else they might be introduced to new baked goods.

ACME prides itself on the points of difference in its in-store bakery departments, Krause tell us. The company has an impressive offering of offerings of cookies, hot breads and muffins. But, the company's cake program truly sets it apart from its competitors. Krause says, "Customers looking for that perfect cake for a special occasion can find it in our bakeries! From wedding and birthday cakes to special occasions, our bakers and decorators can create anything the customer wants. And, our cakes are a bit more modern in look than the average grocery store cake. We can handle special requests from customers. Our main goal is giving the customer exactly what they want in every bakery category."

Krause agrees that the ability to give customers what they want in bakery has been hugely improved under the Albertsons umbrella. "The new ownership has been a huge breath of fresh air," she says. "They have let us be ACME. The strength of our parent company has helped us in many ways. And, they trust us to run our company and are letting the people closest to the customer make the decisions. Now, we are no longer a retreating brand, we're a growth brand. It's nice to be getting bigger and stronger again."

Krause wants to stress to ACME's vendor partners that the company is a "sales-first organization." For that reason, Krause wants vendors to help ACME drive sales: "Bring us innovation. Tell us what's new, what's on the horizon. Together we can meet customer demand and grow sales," she stresses.

Don O'Brien
Sales Manager-Grocery

Don O'Brien: Decentralization Makes ACME Nimble

Don O'Brien, ACME Markets' grocery sales manager, has a long career in the food industry, dating back to a two-year stint in the stores starting in 1990 when he was manager of the Hockessin, DE ACME under the American Stores regime. He then moved over to the office side of the business, and through the years has worked in many capacities, including: category management; sales and merchandising in grocery, frozen and dairy; natural-organic, specialty and ethnic merchandising for both center store and fresh; human resources; risk administration; pricing analyst; procurement; and supplier diversity. Along the way, he earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Delaware, and an MBA in finance from Eastern University and his Six Sigma Green Belt in project management from Villanova University.

In his current position, O'Brien manages center store merchandising for a variety of departments, including grocery, frozen, dairy, fuel and beer, wine and liquor.

Over the years, the industry has changed significantly in several ways, most prominently acquisition and consolidation of retail banners. "In recent years, we've seen things we thought could never happen. Who believed that Genuardi's would be gone? Who thought that A&P would disappear?" he says. "Companies have tried to increase their market share and positions, and ACME, for one, is now stronger than ever."

Also changing over the years has been consumers' shopping patterns and tastes. "More than ever, customers are looking for natural and organic products, as well as ethnic and other specialty foods," explains O'Brien. "In the beginning, about 20 years ago now, natural-organic-ethnic-specialty was the category that nobody wanted. But those of us who did work in it - for some of us it's in our DNA - continued to develop the category in center store and have been able to give customers what they are looking for. We work to stay at the forefront and learn what's new and what customers will be looking for tomorrow."

In the new Albertsons era, ACME is thriving more than ever, O'Brien says. "Our business has improved a great deal under Bob Miller (Albertsons CEO). The auto-my we have now has given us the ability to understand the market and how to succeed locally. We have the nimbleness we need to operate at a very high level. The decision making ability is back in our hands, which vastly improves our speed to market, something that is vital to success for any retailer."

The recent transition of the 71 former A&P stores that ACME acquired has been very smooth, O'Brien tells us. "Dan Croce's plans to convert these stores was a great one. Everyone worked very hard to get the stores re-opened. We still have a lot of work to do, but it is moving along at a pretty good clip. The store associates have been rejuvenated and feel reinvigorated, so overall it's been a very positive experience."

We asked O'Brien if he had a message for the vendor community about ACME Markets. He said: "We have three years under our belts to base our track record on. Business reviews have shown very good numbers for those three years. But, I feel we can drive the business much further if we have partnerships with our vendors that include innovative deals. Together we can all win."

Jay Schneider
Sales Manager-Produce and Floral

Jay Schneider: At ACME Markets, We Sell, Sell, Sell

Jay Schneider, a 32-year veteran of ACME Markets, is the retailer's sales manager for produce and floral. Schneider started with the company "in the stores pushing carts." Most of his tenure has been in produce and Schneider has held a variety of positions in the category, including department clerk, department manager, specialist, field buyer and assistant director.

In his current position, Schneider is responsible for creating the produce ads, determining product selection as well as pricing and promotion for the very critical department. He oversees floral, which is managed by Susan Glenn. Also working with him is assistant sales manager of produce Joe Lerario and Nick Lewandowski, who oversees the pre-made side of the business.

As someone who has spent his entire career in the grocery business, Schneider has certainly seen a great amount of change during that time. "The business as a whole has changed," Schneider says. "We've seen a shift in buying habits over the years, particularly with millennials. They are very tech savvy and have more information available to them than ever before."

Additionally, the products that consumers are looking for and the variety of what is available to them have changed as well. "One area that has changed in produce significantly is organics. Five to eight years ago, we thought organic was here, but it really wasn't. At that time, it was still fairly new. But, in the past two to three years, we have seen huge growth in the category. It is more mainstream now than ever. So, we have had to customize our plans to meet this need."

Aiding ACME's recent growth and stronger market share is the company's relatively new home in the Albertsons family. "We are now part of the second largest traditional grocer in the country," explains Schneider. "We're part of a bigger entity and our competition sees that."

Decentralization under Albertsons has also been a big plus, according to Schneider. "They let us run our desk and make the right decisions for our area. We make that translate to store level. In this day and age, you have to take chances to beat your competition. The support Albertsons gave us through transitioning the 71 former A&P stores that are now part of the ACME portfolio was outstanding, it was above-and-beyond. That partnership continues on and benefits all of us."

Regarding the transition of the former A&P stores, and the entry into a brand new market for ACME - Metro New York, Schneider is very upbeat: "It was a lot of change all at once, but the new stores are seeing the benefits of our new merchandising plans. They are getting on board with our goal to 'sell, sell, sell.' And, with the added stores, we have much more buying power now."

Susan Glenn
Sales Manager-Floral

Susan Glenn Keeps Floral Fresh For ACME

Susan Glenn, ACME Markets' floral sales manager, has been with the Malvern, PA based retailer for 10 years. Glenn, who holds a degree in environmental design from the University of Pennsylvania, has spent her entire career in the floral business. She spent many years with Genuardi's Family Markets and its spin-off Zagara's, but also served some time at floral wholesaler Sunshine Bouquet Co.

As floral sales manager, Glenn is responsible for all of the buying, planning, pricing and merchandising for ACME's floral departments.

In the supermarket business, the floral department is a relatively new addition. But, over the years, the strength has shifted from local florists to the supermarket, where most customers buy their flowers today. It's also a department that has seen dramatic changes from its earliest supermarket days.

"At first, supermarkets bought through intermediaries for floral, mostly from local growers," Glenn explains. "Procurement has changed significantly in recent years. Now, we buy globally. We source product from South America, Holland, South Africa and Canada, just to name a few."

We asked Glenn how she learns about new trends in the floral world, which is really quite separate from most traditional grocery categories. Glenn explains that she has a wide array of opportunities to learn about trends and new products, including floral trade shows, pre-booking meetings with floral suppliers and input from vendors that have trend experts who travel the world looking for the newest and most exciting products. Additionally, under the Albertsons umbrella, ACME can take advantage of Safeway's Debi Lilly Designs to boost its floral offerings.

Speaking of Albertsons, Glenn is bullish on the positive changes at ACME since they became a part of the new team. "It's been a breath of fresh air for ACME," Glenn says, "The Albertsons group really brought us back to the grocery basics: take care of the customers, take care of the employees, have clean stores and full shelves."

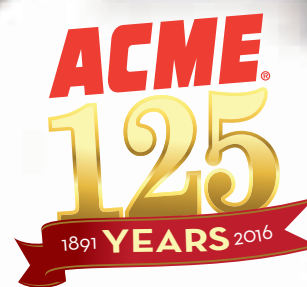

Looking down the road, Glenn sees nothing but positives ahead and knows that continued vendor support will be critical as ACME strives to grow stronger in the markets it serves. "Keep bringing me new ideas and trends. This will help us build sales, which will benefit us all in the long run," Glenn says to the vendor community, which she says continues to be extremely supportive.

Nick Sborlini
Sales Manager-GM/HHB

Nick Sborlini Keeps Sales Growing In GM/HHB

Nick Sborlini, ACME Markets' sales manager for general merchandise and health and beauty care, is a 16-year veteran with the retailer. A 1985 graduate of the Saint Joseph's University food marketing program, Sborlini has spent his entire career in the food industry, first as a food broker, then moving over to the distribution side of the business during a 10-year stint with Royal Food Distributing (Fleming). He went over to retail when he joined Daymon Associates, working on the ACME account, and ultimately joining ACME Markets.

In his current post, Sborlini manages sales and profits for all of ACME's general merchandise and health and beauty care departments.

"We're all about sales, sales, sales," stresses Sborlini, "those are our first, second and third priorities."

Meeting these goals got much easier once ACME became a part of the Albertsons organization. Before the change from Supervalu, ACME worked under a centralized system, which many believed stymied success at the local level.

"Decentralization catapulted us back to being locally relevant," is how Sborlini explains it. "It helped us to grow our business and gain back the market share that we had lost under the old system. We've always worked hard and put our best foot forward. Now, we are bringing ACME back to the glory days. It's truly a family here at ACME. We all take pride in where we work and who we work for."

The timing for ACME to be back in stride couldn't be better, as the market continues to trend back to customers shopping in their home neighborhoods, Sborlini tells us. "Customers more than ever are looking for local. They are going to Wal-Mart and Whole Foods less and are looking for a shopping experience that is closer to home. ACME fills that need in the communities we serve."

With the Albertsons engine behind it and ACME continuing to grow stronger in the markets where it operates, the team is working to build stronger vendor partnerships. "At first the vendors were a little hesitant," Sborlini said of the retailer's conversion to a decentralized buying program after the Albertsons deal. "Now, we just ask them to have an open mind and bring the best programs they have to us. We will collaborate to grow their business and our market share together."

Sherry Caldwell
Director of Marketing

Sherry Caldwell Ensures Marketing Drives Sales

Sherry Caldwell, ACME Markets' director of marketing, is an Albertsons veteran of 23 years. She joined the ACME team in 2006 from Albertsons' Dallas-Fort Worth division. Over the course of her tenure, she spent a number of years on the operations side of the business as a store manager, in center store operations and as a district manager. In 2008, she moved into the realm of marketing. Along the way, she earned her Six Sigma Black Belt.

In her current post, Caldwell is responsible for all of ACME's marketing and advertising programs along with creating and strengthening ACME's brand awareness with existing customers and potential new customers. She leads the retailer's community partnership outreach and works with vendor partners to make their programs come to life in the stores.

Caldwell believes that, in retail, it all goes back to store operations. "Having an operational background helps in creating effective store programs," she explains. "It helps you know what can be executed successfully in-store and how customers will react to various programs."

Like every aspect of the supermarket industry, marketing has changed significantly, particularly with the explosion of social media. "Overall, we have seen a big change in shopping patterns, especially with millennials," Caldwell says. "There are so many digital and social platforms out there that give us many great ways to reach people and connect."

Caldwell and her team, including digital marketing coordinator Lauren Cole, are focused on programs to reach time-starved customers. Whether it's coming up with new ways to help customers shop faster and smarter or providing meal ideas for people on the go, the ACME marketing team shares information through its multiple platforms to help customers prepare for each and every shopping trip.

As Caldwell puts it, "You can't just rely on a weekly store circular anymore to get your message out to today's consumer. We also send weekly emails with fresh deals, make sure our website is easy to navigate, provide digital coupons and have a presence on Facebook, Pinterest and Instagram. We make sure we are easy to find and easy to use."

But, as Caldwell is quick to point out, digital isn't the only avenue the retailer must use to reach and excite shoppers. "What's old is new in grocery, and we can't forget that. Take for example our Monopoly loyalty sweepstakes. Customers are extremely excited about the game, and they have to come into the stores to play."

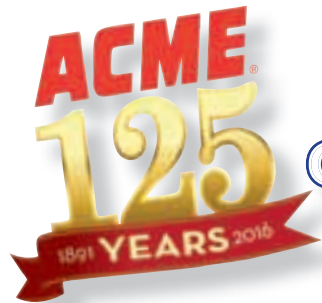

A big part of Caldwell's mission at ACME is to interface with all of the communities in which the retailer operates stores. And that mission just got larger with ACME's acquisition of 71 former A&P stores, many in marketing areas that are completely new to the Malvern, PA based supermarket operator.

Caldwell explains, "Every week we evaluate all of the community opportunities to see how they are in alignment with our focus areas. Our goal is to build better brand awareness for us by being involved in programs that focus on addressing hunger in our communities and supporting children's health and wellness and nutrition."

At the end of the day, Caldwell's goals are in alignment with the rest of the ACME team. "We will move cases. We will continue to be innovative think of new ways to bring programs to life in our stores. We know that customers are looking for new products, new programs and community partners. We will continue to think outside the box and find every way possible to elevate our visibility."

To that end, Caldwell urges ACME's vendor partners to think the same way. "We are willing to try new things, so don't be afraid to bring new ideas to the table. Our door never closes."

Community Service

ACME Markets, in conjunction with the Philadelphia Eagles, presented a check for $22,033 to the Greater Philadelphia Coalition Against Hunger at the preseason game between the Eagles and the Baltimore Ravens.

ACME Markets proudly donated $25,000 to Brining Hope Home's 6th Annual West Chester STOMPS Cancer 5K/Walk. Nearly 1,000 Stompers, sponsors, teams and volunteers came together to raise $70,000 for local families affected by cancer.

The ACME team and Brent Celek's Take Flight Foundation teamed up again to help more than 200 families from the Greater Delaware Valley during Thanksgiving. The Philadelphia Eagles player signed footballs and gave them to families during the event, along with the donated Thanksgiving meals. This event was coordinated by the 19th and Oregon team.

ACME teamed up with WMMR's Preston and Steve for the Campout For Hunter and was able to donate more than 257,000 pounds of food to Philabundance.

Each year the Franklin Township ACME bakes a huge cake for the town's annual community day. This awesome cake was built out of six full sheet cakes and was so big it had to be supported by plywood.

Delicious and nutritious baked goods and snacks in the hands of all.

With Best Wishes to our valued partners at Acme Markets!

Community Service

ACME's Concordville Town Center sponsored the fifth annual Twisted Vintner "Taste of the Town" fundraiser with proceeds going to support the Concordville Chadd's Ford Rotary's community service programs.

A customer tweeted ACME asking if the retailer would donate more than 700 bags to the Red Primary School to teach them about Halloween safety and the Shrewsbury and Lincroft stores were glad to help out!

ACME Markets catered the 50th anniversary celebration, "Under the Big Top" for Garnet Valley School District, celebrating 50 years of graduating classes under one tent!

ACME's Team Eagle supported the Diwali Food Drive, which helped to distribute 30,000 of food to needy people in Chester County through the local food bank.

ACME associates show their support of Making Strides Against Breast Cancer - Delaware.

Community Service continues on page 214

DISCOVER THE GOODNESS

Organic from the Source.
Delicious food, purely grown.

Doesn't it feel good to know where your food comes from? At O Organics, we carefully select producers who meet the highest organic farming standards and share our commitment to sustainable agriculture.

Real Food from Natural Ingredients.
We believe...

Ingredients should come from nature, not a lab. Food should be simply prepared with as little processing as possible. Food should be made with a commitment to quality. Nature has nothing to hide, neither should your food.

1891 YEARS 2016

Congratulations, Acme!
From your proud partners at Barilla

We represent members in grocery industries from chicken catchers to processing and packing employees to meat cutters, stockers and cashiers at your grocery stores. Our members have been there for your companies through the years. They continue to provide quality foods and quality service to your customers.

UFCW Local 27 continues its efforts to provide a high quality of life to your employees/our members past; present and future by ensuring fair wages and benefits through the contracts we negotiate with our Union employers. We aim to provide our members with careers and a comfortable retirement.

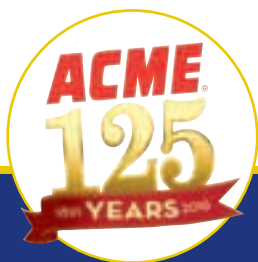

UFCW Local 27 honors and thanks you...

On behalf of our 20,000 members for your dedication to the working men and women.

George Murphy, Jr.
President

Tim Goins,
Exec. Vice President

Eric W. Masten,
Secretary-Treasurer

Michelle Eubank,
Recording Secretary

Proudly serving members in Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia.

Congratulations to our valued partners at Acme Markets!

Custom Beverage Baskets

The party's most popular guest!

When your business has Custom Beverage Baskets, your customers take your brand to wherever the fun is!

One beer basket can be seen by hundreds of potential clients. Besides the advertising advantages, you give your customers the flexibility to pick their own beverage, strengthening their connection with your brand.

Custom Beverage Carriers can be created in any size, design, or capacity, like the 6-pack beer carriers, 2, 4 or 6 -pack wine carriers, 750mL bottles carriers, and the special Bomber (22oz) and Growler (32 or 64oz) beer bottles.

There are design firms and there are build vendors. And there's us. We just plain work better.

With early roots as a production shop, we design and build retail environments with every aspect in mind. What do you want the shopper to feel? Where do you want them to move? How much will it cost to install and maintain? How will it wear? Can it be built economically?

When you approach a design challenge holistically, rather than piece-meal, the end result just plain works better.

KING RETAIL SOLUTIONS

RIGHT DRESS®
The Original and Only Licorice Root Mulch

THE PREMIUM MULCH OF GARDENERS AND LANDSCAPERS FOR OVER 40 YEARS. AVAILABLE IN CONVENIENT-TO-USE 1.5 CUBIC FOOT BAGS FROM A LAWN AND GARDEN DEALER NEAR YOU.

What makes RIGHT DRESS® different?
Unlike other mulches, RIGHT DRESS is composed of ground licorice root, processed to remove soil and other foreign material. It is carefully shredded. When applied to gardens, the fibers settle and interlock, creating a mulch mat resistant to blow away or wash away.

Where should RIGHT DRESS® be used?

- RIGHT DRESS showcases trees and shrubs, and makes the perfect backdrop for flowering gardens.
- For new lawns, apply 200-400 lbs. of RIGHT DRESS for each 1,000 sq. ft. of lawn area, work into top 3" of soil, fertilize, sow quality grass seed.
- Mix 3 parts getting soil to one part RIGHT DRESS and you'll find potted plants thrive and require less frequent watering.
- RIGHT DRESS Licorice Root Mulch can be used anywhere. It is also great for pathways and picnic areas.

Community Service

The ACME team was loud and proud at the Brandywine Youth Club in Gillespie Park in Concord Twp., PA. Throughout the day, the team made connections with hundreds of families to help spread the word about ACME.

As proud members of the Wilmington, DE community, the Trolley Square ACME hosted "Fill A Bus" event to support local families. The store partnered with the Food Bank of Delaware, the Wilmington Police Department, the Trauma Survivors Foundation and WXCX 103.7FM.

ACME partnered with Uncle Ben's to donate $5,000 to the James R. Ludlow School in Philadelphia. The school used the money toward its cafeteria, indoor games and other educational supplies.

The Paoli ACME team proudly donated 50 cases of water to Philadelphia's Walk4Hearing event.

tage, especially when the company went through challenging times before 2013.

"Again, this is about people. I think we have a significant advantage in the market because of the experience and loyalty of our associates," Dosenbach stated. "Our associates' average tenure with the company is 28 years. Nobody knows the market better than they do. And when we became decentralized three years ago and the associates were given renewed empowerment, their dedication and motivation were key drivers towards ACME's recent success. Everyone wants to be part of a winning team. Our associates not only embraced the changes we've made as a company – they've knocked it out of the park."

Dosenbach knows there are more challenges ahead. The market landscape has changed dramatically in the past five years, with more and more retailers entering the food channel, many of them unorganized. Issues remain with health care and pension funds that need to be addressed.

But Dosenbach believes those hurdles can be cleared and refers back to his belief in the ACME game plan and strength and talent of its associates.

"As I've said many times, it's our people that will continue to make a difference."

Community Service

The Tinton Falls ACME has done much to support its community. The store participated in the re-opening of the public library and partnered with the Shrewsbury Fire Department by donating to its Breakfast with Santa at the Firehouse.

ACME supported its Media, PA community during the Festival of Light in Rose Tree Park, bringing cookies, brownies, warm beverages and coupons to hand out to the community.

The Phoenixville ACME supported Variety Club's end of camp Prom Night by donating everything from the hors d'oeuvres and dinner, beautiful decorations, photography services and corsages and boutonnieres as well as a "high-five cheer tunnel," making the night memorable for all the campers.

Community Service

In June 2015, ACME offered a Thunderstorm Power Outage Recovery Discount to customers greatly affected by the stores in the Delaware Valley, giving shoppers a 5% discount on their shopping orders. "This is just our way of taking care of the community we've been a part of for the past 124 years," said ACME president Dan Croce.

Several ACME stores hosted Alex's Lemonade Stands to raise money to benefit pediatric cancer research. The West Goshen store raised $1,800.

Good Food Shouldn't Go to Waste — Donate to Help Feed Those in Need

Philabundance has experienced an increase in people calling for food assistance over the past year. With 750,000 people throughout the Delaware Valley struggling with hunger, we need food donations to help meet the growing number of families unsure of where they'll get their next meal.

If you ever have a load of product that you cannot receive or deliver, please consider donating it to help us feed those in need. Philabundance can accept:

- Items that don't meet market specifications
- Items that are close to code
- Customer returns
- Produce that is 90% viable with a shelf life of 5-7 days
- Damaged cases

We look forward to receiving or picking up your generous food donation and using it to provide food to some of the 90,000 people we feed every week across the Delaware Valley.

To make a food donation, please contact the Food Acquisition Department at 215-339-0900.
